

September 23, 2025

The Honorable Brooke Rollins
Secretary, U.S. Department of Agriculture
1400 Independence Avenue, SW
Washington, DC 20250

Dear Secretary Rollins,

As farmers and ranchers, we appreciate your commitment to put “farmers first.” As a part of that commitment, we are glad to see the U.S. Department of Agriculture continue its critical, longstanding support for the Sustainable Agriculture Research and Education (SARE) program. We encourage USDA to complete its review of SARE applications by the start of the new fiscal year in order to ensure that resources make it to the hands of farmers.

Administered by the National Institute of Food and Agriculture (NIFA), SARE - USDA’s only farmer-led research program - is focused on improving farmer profitability, stewardship, and quality of life. For over 35 years, SARE has developed a stellar track record and been an unquestioned leader supporting farmers as they address key sustainability challenges.

SARE funds cooperative efforts to develop new marketing strategies for farmers, research into new processed and valued-added farm products, and expanded market access through regional supply chain development. SARE projects are at the forefront of challenges farmers are facing with land and animal management, with projects that help build soil health, reduce energy costs, and enhance on-farm efficiency through integrated livestock, agroforestry, and perennial cropping systems. The program’s continued emphasis on practical in-field research, on farmer-to-farmer knowledge sharing, and on farmer-researcher collaboration ensures that SARE’s priorities are constantly evolving and responding to the challenges that farmers and ranchers face every day.

SARE also provides grants, training, and resources to agriculture professionals to build their knowledge and skills through its Professional Development Program, including professionals from the Cooperative Extension Service and USDA. For decades, SARE has supported graduate students, helping establish the pipeline of future agricultural scientists who are needed to make the next breakthroughs in agriculture. Over its 37-year history, SARE has awarded over $478 million across 9,831 initiatives focusing on farmer-led research and education in every state across the country.

With SARE’s FY 2025 funding released, farmers will now be better prepared to meet future productivity challenges and remain competitive, due to more easily accessible and regionally appropriate research through SARE. Applications from SARE host institutions will still need to go through review at NIFA before they are funded, and we hope USDA will prioritize the review of these applications to ensure funding is approved on time . We appreciate USDA putting farmers first by continuing to honor its commitment to farmer-led research.

Sincerely,

Northeast Region
